THE FBI MIGHT WANT YOU

The F.B.I. has recently been more active in its probe of the women's community and of the gay community. In Lexington, Kentucky; in New Haven and Hartford, Conn.; in Philadelphia, Pa.; and in New York City there has been an increase of FBI harassment of our sisters and brothers. Not only do they knock on our doors - relatives and people we associate with are being called on. People are also being called to testify at grand juries.

THE POSSIBILITY OF THIS SITUATION SPRINGING UP IN AND AROUND BOSTON IN THE NEAR FUTURE IS LIKELY. IN ANY CASE, WE SHOULD BE PREPARED AND KNOW OUR RIGHTS.

YOU DO NOT HAVE TO TALK TO THE F.B.I.

- Anything you say can be used against you, or your sisters and brothers. Don't think that you can outsmart them, or that you don't have anything to hide. Any little piece of information might be useful to them, to hurt you or your friends.
- You have a right to consult with a lawyer before you talk to them, and your lawyer can be present if they do question you.
- Even if you do talk to the F.B.I., you can still be ordered (by means of a SUBPOENA) to testify before a grand jury. This has often happened in other cities. Your rights in front of a grand jury are severely limited. YOU NEED A LAWYER.

IF YOU ARE VISITED BY THE F.B.I., OR SUBPOENAED TO TESTIFY BEFORE A GRAND JURY, CONTACT THE NATIONAL LAWYERS GUILD

The Saxe Case

Feds Fantasize 'Huge Lesbian Underground'

By Elaine Lafferty

While the FBI has generally been intensifying its pursuit of political fugitives in recent weeks, the hunt for Susan Saxe and Katherine Powers has affected gay and lesbian feminist communities most directly. Saxe and Powers made the FBI's Ten Most Wanted List by allegedly participating in a 1970 Boston bank holdup in which a policeman was killed. It was believed then that the robbery was intended to finance the anti-war movement.

Because Saxe and Powers were believed to have been residing in Hartford, Conn., at some point, the FBI began questioning members of the lesbian community there. Ellen Grusse, a computer technician, and Terry Turgeon, a department store clerk, were approached in January by FBI agents seeking information. When they exercised their constitutional rights by refusing to talk to the FBI, they received a subpoena to appear before a federal grand jury within 24 hours.

When Grusse and Turgeon refused to testify on the grounds that their rights were being violated, and in protest of this flagrant abuse of the grand jury process, they were granted "use immunity". This means that your testimony can't be used against you, but that it can (and will) be used against other people. It also means that you can now go to jail for refusing to testify. The two women still refused to testify and were subsequently jailed on contempt of court charges.

A similar situation occurred only a week later in Lexington, Kentucky. Six gay students (five women) refused to assist the FBI investigation by declining to testify before the federal grand jury convened there. They too were jailed on contempt charges. Their attorney, constitutional lawyer Robert Sedler, believes his clients have little chance of winning the appeal that he is presently entering into the U.S. Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals. "I think the FBI really believes there is this huge lesbian underground responsible for hiding fugitives", he said, in a telephone conversation with MR. "The grand jury is acting as an investigative arm of the FBI... and although this is an outrageous abuse of the original intent, the law is simply not on our side."

Although Sedler has advised his clients of this, four of the six have chosen to remain silent. One of the women, Jill Raymond, told the Louisville Times, "I am a socialist, a feminist and a lesbian. And I believe that the FBI, not unlike other government institutions, works to repress the activities, the very life, of people who in any way try to become more aware of their rights and change against the present system. We are innocent people and we are going to jail. The government has shown it's power. This is the way it operates and is an indication that this just isn't a democracy."

Because the term of a grand jury cannot exceed 18 months, and the Lexington grand jury's term expired in April, the two women were released from prison. Now, however, it is a mediately convened, and Grusse and Turgeon were re-subpoenaed for May 6th. The Kentucky grand jury does not expire until April 1976 so that the four remaining women there face the possibility of imprisonment until then.

On March 27, Susan Saxe was apprehended in Philadelphia. The story that the FBI circulated claimed that a policeman had recognized her from a photo just reissued. Apparently that story is not being readily accepted by several New York news reporters. According to those sources, the FBI was aware that Saxe was in Philadelphia for two months. The reasons for this delay in her capture remain unexplained. The text of her statement was printed in the last issue of Majority Report. Only one sentence was picked up by most of the wire services however... "I remain a lesbian, a feminist, and an Amazon."

Search Reaches New York

While many lesbians and feminists were just becoming aware of the existence of this person Susan Saxe, New York City lesbians and feminists were just becoming aware of the existence of a grand jury just convened here, apparently to investigate the harboring of fugitives.

To date, only Jane Alpert and John Hughey have been subpoenaed. Alpert, Hughey, Patricia Swinton, and Sam Melville were all indicted in 1969 as co-conspirators in an attempt to bomb government property. Alpert jumped bail, Saxe went underground. Hughey served 2 1/2 years, and Melville was killed in Attica while serving a 25 year sentence. Jane Alpert surrendered to authorities last November and is presently serving a 27 month sentence. She will be eligible for parole in seven months. Swinton was arrested in Vermont last month and is currently out on bail, waiting for her trial which is scheduled to begin in May.

Although U.S. Attorney Paul Curran's comments (stating that Alpert had cooperated fully with the government) were the source of much controversy in the feminist and left movements, recent speculation has focused more on Alpert's safety while in prison. "The Midnight Special", a prisoner's newsletter published by the New York chapter of the National Lawyers Guild, recently printed an editorial charging Alpert with providing information to authorities in exchange for a light sentence. After stating the location of the prison in which Alpert is serving, the editorial concludes, "We feel that it is necessary for us to print this in order to point out to the sisters inside that there is a traitor in their midst."

While there is no lack of diverse opinion on the issues surrounding both the Alpert case and the Saxe case, several basic realities do exist: (1) the FBI is implementing harassment campaigns against lesbian and feminist communities in their pursuit of fugitive women in this country; (2) the FBI is using the subpoena power of the grand jury system to illegally harass and jail people; (3) With grand juries presently sitting in New York, NY, Seattle, Wash., New Haven, Conn., Lexington, Ky., San Francisco, Calif., and Harrisburg, Pa., there is no end to this invasion in sight.

Several groups have begun to organize efforts to disavow the institution of the grand jury. They state that the grand jury is an unconstitutional institution. The Center for Constitutional Rights is planning to file a lawsuit against the grand jury system and is also people participating any other form of protest or demonstration.

Agent Watching

Female FBI agents are being used in the investigation of the lesbian and feminist movements in several cities.

Lisa Grob, a 5'8" young woman from New Jersey, visited a NOW-NY member in her home, along with a male agent named Bob Cassidy. Grob has long brown hair, and was wearing red rouge and a blazer-slacks outfit.

Mary Elizabeth Dunn, 5'10" tall with short streaked hair and a soft Midwestern accent, was seen hanging out in a gay bar in Cincinnati, Ohio, for about a month. The bartender saw her walk out with a receiver of phone numbers of women "who want to make contacts" which had been kept on the end of the bar. She visited Marge Robertson of NOW and Wendy Foxman of University of Cincinnati Women's Affairs Council asking about Saxe and Powers, who had been fugitives since a bank robbery in Massachusetts in 1970.

Susan Lynn Ruley, a 25-year-old former Marine Corps lieutenant from Long Beach, Calif., completed a 14 week training course as a special agent in October, 1972, and was assigned to Omaha.

Joanne Pierce, 31, a former sister of Miney from Niagara Falls, N.Y., was one of the first two women agents, along with Ruley, in October, 1972. Her first assignment was St. Louis.

ENCLOSURE

The Big Bluff

The mainstay of a political investigation is the big bluff. Agents tend to come on as if they are concerned about you, your family or the welfare of your organization. They characterize the fugitives they are asking about as "dangerous," "manipulative," "violent," "disruptive," or some other vague adjective. If they find out something about you that you may wish to keep secret, such as being a lesbian or associating with radicals, they often toss this info (true or false) on your parents, or even grandparents, to upset them enough to guilt you into talking. An FBI agent reportedly told a NOW member in New York that two fugitives were manipulating women through lesbianism. The agent, sounding concerned, said that the women "seem nice at first, but suddenly turn on you." A woman in Philadelphia was told that the agents were investigating "a murder down the street" and did she know where any lesbians hung out. Agents have been known to say they agree with what your group is trying to accomplish but isn't it sad how a few bomb throwers can spoil a good radical movement.

IT IS CRUCIAL THAT NO ONE BELIEVE ANYTHING A POLITICAL INVESTIGATOR TELLS HER. ASSUME EVERYTHING IS A BLUFF.
